

Eight miles high

Sam Phillips of the Ross-on-Wye Group of the Ramblers leads a walk that offers all kinds of everything

This is an eight mile circular walk that starts in the village of Much Marcle about half way between Ross-on-Wye and Ledbury. The route is flat for the first three miles and then climbs gently to the top of Marcle Ridge. The rest of the route is generally downhill. The main features of the walk are St Bartholomew's Church in Much Marcle; the wonderful half-timbered house, Hall Court and the superb views from the top of Marcle Ridge. The climb to reach the top of Marcle Ridge is longish but gentle.

1. The walk starts from the lane leading to St Bartholomew's Church. Walk away from the church and turn left when reaching the road. Go past the entrance to Hellens, one of the finest Tudor houses in the country, to the junction with the A449 Ross to Ledbury road. Go straight across and pass to the right of the Much Marcle garage. Go through a gate and turn right. With the hedgerow on your right pass a small brown wooden hut, over a small bridge into a smaller field. After about 120 yards go over two stiles with a railway sleeper bridge between them. After about 50 yards turn sharp left over stiles and a plank bridge. Go straight ahead along the field boundary to the corner of the field. Turn right, ignoring the stile to your left, and continue with the hedge and woodland to your left. Cross two stiles, separated by a small footbridge, on your left, then turn right.

Keeping the small stream to your right cross another footbridge into the next field. Follow the hedgerow for about 200 yards and turn left over a footbridge with squeeze stiles at each end. Go diagonally across the field heading between two prominent trees towards a clump of trees. Cross another footbridge with stiles and keep straight on with the hedge on your left.

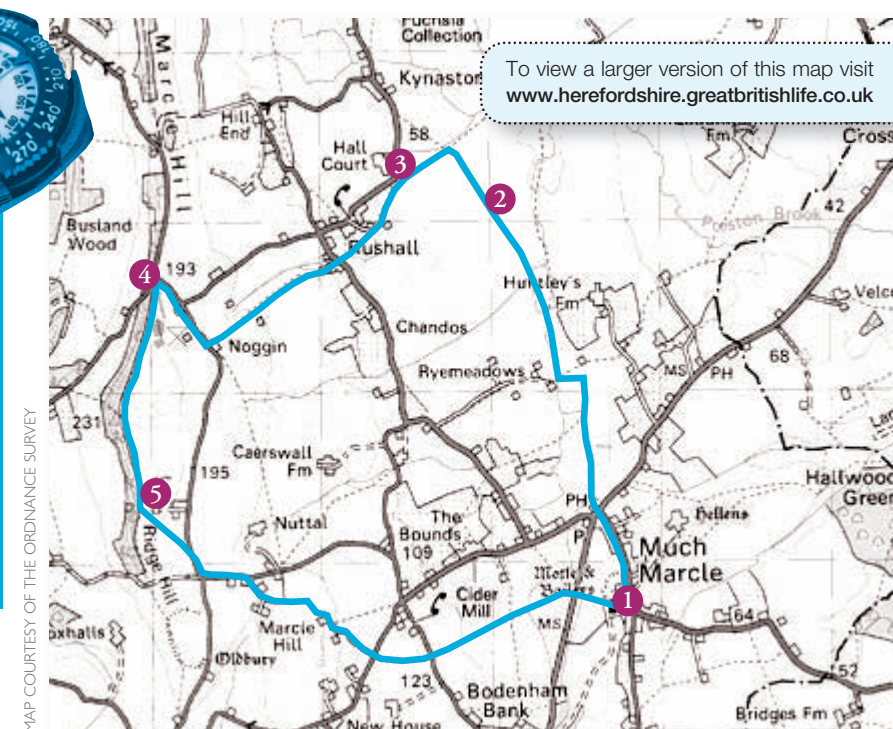

2. Cross another stile and go straight on. Just past the stile there is a sad sight, a large pile of redundant hop poles. Do not enter the field with the hop poles but continue straight on with a new hawthorn hedge on the left. Cross a stile with a horse jump alongside it into another field. Pass between a tree and the hedge then veer 45 degrees left towards a bridge with stiles half hidden in the far hedge. On reaching the bridge, turn left and head across the field towards a section of tarmac lane that is visible beyond the next hedgerow, and to the left of the half-timbered house that is Hall Court.

3. On reaching the lane our route goes to the left but a short detour to the right, to Hall Court is very well worth it. Hall Court was once the home of Dr John Fell, (1625-1686) Head of Christ Church College and Bishop of Oxford. He is remembered for an epigram written by Thomas Brown (1663-1704) the satirist who, as a student at Christ Church had been told off by Dr Fell, wrote:

*"I do not like thee, Dr Fell
 The reason why I cannot tell
 But I know and know full well
 I do not like thee Dr Fell"*

Foxgloves on the route

Apparently, the crusty cleric was so amused he let Brown off.

Today Hall Court is the home of William and Frances May and of The Amazing Cider Company. The cider is produced entirely from local apples and, in common with good Herefordshire ciders is "cider as it should be". The Amazing Cider Company's products have won awards at The Big Apple Cider Trials in 2010 and at the International Competition at the Hereford Museum, also in 2010. Well worth a try.

Retrace your steps to where you emerged onto the lane and almost immediately leave the lane, to the left over a stile into a field. Once in the field the Ridge Hill TV mast is clearly visible ahead. Go straight ahead for about 100 yards then veer right towards a cream coloured house. Just to the left of the house cross a stile onto a track (this is a private drive but the right of way crosses it). Turn left and very shortly right to cross another stile. Go straight ahead to cross a stile in a post and wire fence. Then turn about 45 degrees to the right and go up the field towards a group of buildings. Cross a stile onto a lane, cross the lane and follow a track to the right of a corrugated iron shed or garage. Just after the track swings left, go up a set of steps on the right and into a field. straight up the edge of the field and at the twin posts of the power lines, turn right and over a stile into a field, then turn left. Proceed along the top of a lovely green steep-sided valley. This is the beginning of the climb to the top of Marcle Ridge. Follow the edge of the valley until you reach a modern barn and a tarmac lane. Turn right along the lane and go for about 500 yards to a road junction with a finger post and a set of steps to the left. There is a small car park and display board showing local walks but the picnic table has been removed.

4. Climb the steps and pause to look back. The views across towards Ledbury and the Malverns are magnificent. At this point you join a part of the ▶
